Yaida O. FORD, practices condominium law, civil rights, employment law and estate planning. An accomplished trial lawyer, Yaida has tried several cases to verdict, including a 2018 case that she successfully tried against two Prince George's County Police Officers, Iverson Mall and a security company. "I get bored very easily," says Ford about her track record for taking complicated cases to trial. "But I only like going all the way (to trial) when there is a deep sense of justice that needs to be served that is bigger than just that one case. Whether it is the constant narrative that we hear of the woman who was sexually harassed by her boss and then he got promoted after she reported it, or the repeated incidents of widespread grade tampering by administrators at majority-black high schools who are depriving our kids of quality education. These are the issues that I connect with enough to grit my teeth for what could be a very long battle."

Yaida has served as an advocate for both condominium associations and unit owners in complex litigation. Yaida is undefeated in commercial litigation against large financial institutions who sue condominium associations after the associations institute foreclosure proceedings against a unit for past due assessments. Yaida's impressive debt collection practice has strengthened the operating budgets of several community associations.

Yaida's estate planning practice is unique in that she does not exclusively serve high net worth individuals. Her staff enjoys serving individuals and married couples of modest means who simply need a plan in place to make sure their last wishes are carried out. "Ford Law Pros PC started out very modestly," Ford says. "While my practice has grown exponentially, I am committed to doing what I love to do and serving the people and small businesses that I love to serve."
